Before You Start

Have you ever wondered about your partner’s interests, dislikes or likes, or what they really think about something? Imagine how much closer you and your partner will feel after taking the time to answer some of the most intimate questions and truths that can be shared between partners. Too often we take what we see at face value instead of taking the time to really understand what our partner is saying or what they are about. If more couples spent time truly getting to know each other you would probably find less heartbreak and more people in happier, long-term relationships.

The questions in this book are geared towards getting to know your partner more intimately. They are written in a way to help start engaging and stimulating conversation. They say that love is friendship set on fire. If so, your romance will be burning hot after a few nights of answering these questions!

To help get you started, here a few ideas of how to ask and answer these questions:

- Set aside a quiet time one night a week for a specified amount of time that you can ask and answer the questions.
- Print out a series of questions and answer them when you are in the car together.
- E-mail each other one question a day to answer and talk about your responses when you get home.
- Talk about one question a day over dinner together each night.

RULES OF CONDUCT

It is important to establish a code of conduct before beginning. These questions are meant to invite discussion and understanding of your partner, not to negate their opinions or experiences. Disagreements or misunderstandings can happen when you are talking about matters that are important to you. Just remember that you are asking these questions with the intent of understanding each other better. Each person should be allowed to fully express their point of view without being attacked. This can be an extremely fun and eye opening experience to share together. Keep an open-mind when sharing your thoughts with each other.

Let the questions begin...
